THE OMAHA SUNDAY BEE MAGAZINE PAGE

Copyright, 1911, by American-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

No.157-Style, or How to Dress, by Mine.

Lima Cavalieri, the Most Famous

Living Beauty.

Living Beauty.

Mme. Lina Cavalieri.

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri

WISH every woman would adopt for her motto in dressing: "I will so dress as to make the most of my good points and the least of my bad ones." If women would all do this, our eyes would never be offended by the sight of a woman unbecomingly gowned

For instance, suppose you are too stout. Do not, I beseech you, lace your corsets too tightly. Better wear them merely snug. Your aim should be not to make yourself narrower, which is impossible, but to make yourself longer, which is quite feasible. Lengthen the apparent lines of your figure by always wearing high headdress. Let the crown of your hat be high, or let the trimming be carried high. Let the bows or other ornaments worn on the head be high and, if possible, be pointed. Make the apparent lines of your figure longer by wearing

Due Warning

ROTORUA has been laughing over the wording of a norice that nas, been placed by the Public Works Department on some of the electric wire posts on the road to Okere, in New Zealand.

Some time ago a Maori youth, who seemed to have a misguided taste for experimenting, threw a long piece of cable over the electric wires that run to Retorus from the power station at the Okere Falls.

The town was at once plunged in darkness for two or three hours until the mischief had been tocated,

The dusky and youthful experimenter was carpeted in the court and fined for his scientific enthusiasm, and the department put up this notice:

"Any person climbing the electric light poles or damaging the insulators is liable to a fatal shock and a penalty of 10 pounds."

Just the Same

G EORGE ADE, the American author, from the neighborhood in Indiana where he was born was in town on a visit to a relative. Mr. Ade thought that theatre tickets would be a fitting attention, and, on sconsulting her as to what she would prefer to see, she said that she had seen "The Merchant of Venice" over thirty years ago, and had always desired to see it again. He accordingly procured the tickets.

The next day he called to find out how san liked the performance, as compared with what she remembered from long ago.

"Well," replied the old lady, "Venice seems to have spruced up a right smart bit, but that Shylock is the same mean, grasping critter that he used to be."

A CAUSE FOR EXCITEMENT. The sons of the rich were all enthustastically following someone down the

"What's up?" somebody asked. A rather more accommodating young nabeb than the others turned round.
"Do you see that tall fellow up front?" he asked.

'Weil," he said, "he's discovered a new way to spend money,"

MIGHT COME IN USEFUL AGAIN.

Jack (just engaged) Can you take the name Mabel off this ring and substitute Joan? Jeweier-Yes, but it will cost you comething; the name is cut so deep.

Jack-All right; but don't cut it so deep next time. NOT GOING THE WHOLE HOG.

Father (to young Adonts who has begged for the hand of his daughter)-But, my dear sir, are you able to sup-

Adonis (softly)-Ye-es, I could. But I only asking for the daughter.

She gives especial beauty series. She writes of individual taste in dress and gives much needed advice:

"When you consider style let it be your style not the fleeting fashion of the moment." thought to her whom fashion writers forget, the stout woman. She tells her how to dress to bring out her best points and hide her worst ones. She counsels the slender woman, also, how to make the most of the personality given her by

> She concludes with valuable advice to all women. "Buy only a few things and wear them out in one season, so that you can afford a fresh wardrobe he next."

stripes. Narrow ones are sufficient. Broad ones are vulgar. At least wear solid colors if not stripes, and let your hat, gown, boots and wrap all be of the same color.

Never wear cross stripes nor checks nor plaids. Avoid red and other bright colors. They emphasize your breadth of

"If you are stout let the crown of your hat be high, or let the trimming be carried high."

Contrive to always wear longwaisted effects. Let your cuffs be straight, not sloping nor scalloped. Wear high collars on your street started eleven or twelve years age.

on a comparatively small scale; but the venture proved so profitable that the owner developed it into a great modern industry. He now claims to have more than 100,000 full-grown ing the accuracy of the figures has matter of fact, the estimate is prob-

Of course, the object of this vast pigeon-breeding establishment is the production of squabs. In the early spring months about forty dozen squabs are killed and sent to market

every day. In the summer and fail

the daily output of squabs may exceed 400 dozen, and the squab crop

each year exceeds 20,000 dozen. This is "something doing" in squabs of a surety; and as thes; sell at from higher than that at some seasons

of the year, it is evident that the income from the mammoth pigeon form foots up a very tidy sum anvei" by any means. The birds are said to consume from two to three tons of grain every day of the year, and the labor of looking after them,

$3.50 per dozen, and even

However, it is not all "vei-

many thousands below the pigeons on his farm. Anyone doubt-the privilege of counting!

actual number.

Let all your house or evening gowns that are low-necked be cut

V-shape-never rounded. Ruches are not for you. Let the lender woman wear them. Your furs should be of the shortbled as mink, Black is your best color. If you wear colors, wear dark shades. C.ep s and chiffons and close-Never wear any material that has a high lustre, anything that shines.

The large woman looks better with few or no jewels. A good rule for you is to put your money into good materials. not trimmings. The less trimming on your gowns the better. Let elegance be denoted by the quality and cut of your clothes, not by their adornment.

Don't wear the rough finished clothes, whether they are fashionable or not. Broadcloth is best for you in Winter, crepe de chine between seasons, and linens in Summer.

Look upon ruffles as an abomination for you.

Depend for becomingness not upon bizarre effects introduced into your costume, but on the simple lines, the richness of the material of your clothes and the fact that the colors match your eyes or harmonize with your hair, or both.

A stout woman's effect of being especially well groomed is always attractive. Let your hair shine with care, the teeth be perfectly white, the skin be clear and rosy, the eyes look as though you had plenty of and as though there was beneath the lids no disturbing "sand." Be most careful of your hands, and be sure that your boots are well fit-

"When you consider style let it be your style not the fleeting style of the moment."

ting and well blacked and that they not run down at the heels. The stout woman must study to be modern and well groomed. The slender woman can afford to make an effort after quaintness and pic-turesqueness. For her are the soft, fluffy fabrica and many ruffles. She can wear bright colors and striking designs. She can wear contrasting shades in the same costume.

of the tailors, on whom the stout woman wisely relies for her best

She can wear girdles of different material and sashes of contrasting shades on her gowns.

She can wear the cheviots and serges and other rough suitings sometimes so much in vogue. Her furs can be of the long-haired

She can wear a gown of one color and a bat of another and look well dressed in them.

She can wear the short skirts which disfigure the stout weman. But permit me to give this advice to all women; When you consider style, let it be your style, not the fleeting fashion of the moment. I am wearing my hair, and expect nlways to wear it, in the way that is most becoming. An artist friend showed me the heads of women on the frescoes on the Forum in Rome. Said he: "That is the way you should wear your hair." I adopted his suggestion, and I shall never change unless when I am old my features so harden that I will have to soften their effect by a soft and loose arrangement of my hair about my forehead, Prepare your figure for your gown by looking well to your carriage. Keep your chin and abdomen in. The rest of the figure will fall easi-

Don't despair because you have little money for dress. Let forethought take the place of the money you lack. Make a careful list of the gowns and extras you need and follow that list. Allow yourself so much for dresses, so much for wrans and a stated amount for avtras, and don't over that Ragin vone looking about early, but don't huy until the senson is well started. Fashions are fickle, and what seemed to be the accepted fashion early in October may have gone its way with other momentary fads by the last of you are stout never wear' checks nor plaids nor cross stripes."

for the season at one time. Buy what you actually need for the becinning of the season. Then wait for the fixity of modes and the moderation of prices that mark the mid-season. Especially follow this ad-vice in the matter of pats.

Try not to buy all your wardrobe

When you try on hats, stand before the mirror. If you sit you will only know whether the hat is becoming to your face. If you stand you can assure yourself whether it is becoming to the figure as well.

Buy only a few things and wear them out in one season so that you can afford a fresh wardrobe the Choose inconspicuous gowns and hats. Ask yourself two questions: 'Arm they suitable?" and "Are they becoming?"

Don't be anxious about styles, which are the monds of the moment. But give much thought to style, which is yourself.

Any exercise that will cause the

M. M. asks: "Can you tell me of some simple exercises that can be taken in the house for indigestion?" The ferm of indigestion you de-muscles of the abdomen to contract, as bending your head slowly from She can get on without the aid an erect position until it rests upon the knees, and then bank again, will killing the squabs and preparing RAVELERS approaching Los them for market, and keeping all Angeles from the north, over buildings and nesting places clean the Southern Pacific railroad, and sanitary, is for from triffing. are often astonished at seeing from The pigeons are housed in the car windows immense flocks of large buildings, the main building being sixty feet long, thirty feet wide and twenty feet high. Both pigeons, numbering many thousands, just on the outskirts of the city. interior and exterior of each of the These belong to the world's largest buildings are banked up solidly with pigeon farm, owned by T. G. Johnson, and justly considered one of the mating boxes in tiers, narrow aisles show places of California. Merely as a curiosity, in fact, it ranks along with the alligator farm, the giving ready access to every nest. At frequent intervals the nests are disinfected by spraying them with ostrich farms and other tourist ata weak solution of carbolic acid; upon the ground, so that the birds and insecticides are freely used to tractions. 3 This greatest of all pigeou farms consists of about eight acres of sandy, gravelly land along the bed of the Los Angeles river. It was keep the birds free from parasites Pigeon rearing on a mammoth scale is said to be attended with fewer difficulties in Southern California than elsewhere. Climatic conditions are favorable to continuous breeding, winter and summer; and hawks and other natural enemies are rare. Contrary to the general opinion, pigeons are not much given to foraging, and rarely trouble agriculturists and fruit growers of the neighborhood. At the Los Angeles establishment there is always an abundant supply of grain lying hunt for a living. Consequently, they never fly far away, but attend to business with exemplary fidelity. Not the least important circumstance contributing to the attractiveness of the pigeon farm is the fact that by far the larger number of the birds are pure white. At feeding time, particularly in the early afternoon, when practically all the birds are assembled around the buildings, the buildings and the grounds close around them bear no slight resemblance to a series of huge snow banks.

The Biggest Pigeon Farm in the World

Some of the 100,000 Pigeons on the Los Angeles Farm.

The pigeon is strictly monogam ous, selecting a mate and displaying marital fidelity that might well be emulated by featherless and presumably superior bipeds. The fe male begins laying eggs when five or six months old. She lays two eggs and then settles down to hatching. The period of incubation is eighteen days, the male bird sharing the labor with the female. young birds consist of little but appetite, so that both the father and mother are kept busy feeding their offspring. The method used for feeding the young is peculiar. The little pigeons thrust their bills into the mouths of the parent birds; and these feed the young by disgorging partially digested food. Being thus supplied with pre-digested babyfood, the young birds grow with extraordinary rapidity, so that when from four to five weeks old they are ready for the market as squabs They are killed by breaking their necks, plucked while still warm, bled and placed on ice, ready for delivery to the hotel and restaurant trade, or for shipment to distant

Although the Los Angeles pigeon farm is, as yet, pre-eminent in that particular line, it is probable that it will soon have a rival. Several years ugo a pigeon farm was started in Pennsylvania, which is now said to have 20,000 full-grown birds, with accommodations already prepared for a total of 100,000 birds. Each pair of pigeons produces five or six pairs of young birds annually, so that the natural increase would be very rapid but for the daily slaughter incident to the effort to supply the insatfable demand for squabs It is said that the profits of a propconducted "squabbery" much greater than those of an ordinary poultry farm, and that the bazards of the business are rather help you to better conditions. Vary this with lifting the feet from the floor and until the log is in a straight line with the bottom of the chair on which you are sitting. In other words, kicking from the floor to the level of the chair-seat in which you are sitting. But drink water coplously. Take a spoonful of lemon juice in each glass of water. By "coplously" I mean at least ten glasses of water a day, beginning always with the morning stomach bath of two or three glasses of hot or cool water, according to taste, slowly drunk. Deep breathing many times a day at an open window will be a good agent for the relief you desire. M. M. says further: "Sometimes my nose becomes red from ne cause that I know of. This flushing lasts about an hour, and sometimes longer. If I become a little excited or overheated it immediately becomes red. This is very inconvenient. Can you suggest a remedy?" Loosen your clothing. As a rule the woman whose nose is red, unless she be a victim of alcoholism, is a victim of another bad habit, wearing her clothing too tight. Loosen your corsets, your garters, your collars. Wear larger gloves and shoes. Avoid rich and spley foods and the condition should gradually disappear.

The same inquirer asks what may be done for a few obstinate freckles remaining on a tender skin? Try bathing them often with lemon juice. Bathe the face at night before retiring, in buttermilk. These are the simplest remedies. If, after thorough trial they are not effective I will suggest a remedy to be found in drug stores. But I always prefer to first seek my remadles from the kitchen or the bed of simple herbs in the kitchen garden.